From Denver Public Library Leadership

Dear Library Community,

At the launch of 2020, if you would have told me that a few short months later the library would close its doors to the public and remain virtual throughout the rest of the year, I would not have believed you. Yet the COVID-19 pandemic quickly became a reality that impacted our community.

In 2020, a year like no other, our team came together to reimagine the library once our doors closed on March 16. We quickly moved many of our services and programs online or on the phone to continue to connect with customers, even if we could not see them in person. Instead of joining us for Storytime at a favorite branch—customers could now watch via YouTube to see a friendly face and hear a lively story. In April, our outreach teams were able to reconnect with the community, distributing free books and essentials like water and personal care kits. In July, we launched curbside pickup service. In August, we piloted our popular outdoor technology services. Today, we, like the rest of the world, eagerly look forward to and plan for a return to normalcy.

As we look back, we are pleased to share a few stories of how we came together to reimagine the library for the times. We are eager to welcome our customers back to our locations again in 2021. While the library will look different, we hope to come back stronger than ever to serve the community we love.

Sincerely,

Michelle Jeske
City Librarian

Behind the Scenes - How Denver Public Library Assisted With COVID Response

When the library closed its doors in March 2020, a time when there was so much uncertainty and fear about how the pandemic would unfold, in an unprecedented moment of crisis, our staff asked, “How could we help?”

With the gravity of the pandemic weighing down on everyone, staff felt the need to find ways to contribute to the efforts of providing personal protective equipment (PPE) for essential workers and to those in our community most in need. Pivoting fast to answer the call, a week after the library doors closed, sewing machines from the ideaLABS were taken home and fired up, along with stacks of cut fabric and spooled up thread. DPL staff made over 5,300 face masks with donated fabric and existing tools and machines found in the library’s ideaLAB maker spaces. Sewing machines weren’t the only tools used in this effort. ideaLAB 3D printers were also taken home by staff to help make parts for face shields, which helps PPE last longer. Staff created over 400 3D printed face shields and buckles in their home garages and kitchens across the city. As staff made these items by hand and machine one by one, they said that they felt that they were connecting with the community and working together to create something that would make a difference in the biggest time of need.

All of these were made in collaboration with Make4Covid, who was in constant communication with hospitals like CU Health and Children’s. All the PPE made by staff was distributed to hospitals, care facilities and other medical front-line workers during what felt like the height of the pandemic. “As we’re all coming to grips with this new world, it’s been awesome to have a lifeline and to be able to create something that will help someone else,” says Nate Stone, who is the ideaLAB Program Administrator. “We’re doing a very small part, but it’s tangible.”

As we now reach the point of being able to safely return to our libraries and begin opening them to the public, we recognize it was a long road to arrive where we are and remember staff’s efforts during the initial response in making and creating their way to supporting our community.

Keeping Customers Connected With Technology

In 2020, the digital divide has become more evident than ever, bringing to light the technological disparities when it comes to our communities accessing basic technology such as computers and internet service. As everything has shifted to connecting virtually, from our schools to work meetings to social gatherings to casual hangouts for most, individuals and communities have been left behind with a lack of access to tend to basic needs like applying for a job, applying for unemployment or simply connecting with friends and family. This is where Denver Public Library showed up for those in need through our commitment to digital inclusion.

As 2020's challenges have been evident and never-ending, we came up with new ways to provide support in a time of uncertainty and insecurity. The library's staff was on the frontlines throughout the pandemic providing technology and internet access to our library community. In July, we successfully piloted and launched outdoor computing services at the Central Library and eleven other branches across the city. At these locations, we provided Chromebook access along with no-cost printing. We also kept our Wi-Fi on at all locations during our closure for those who needed internet service for their devices. In partnership with the Denver Office of Economic Development, we launched a technology check-out program. Customers checked out Chromebooks and Wi-Fi hotspots, just as they do with books, to take home and utilize in the safety of their own spaces.

In an effort to meet customers where they are, outreach was a big service that the Community Technology Center (CTC) focused its efforts on building. One place was the Safer Outdoor Spaces (S.O.S.) led by the Colorado Village Collaborative. "While providing outdoor tech services during the pandemic, I've been witness to a range of digital needs: ranging from filing for unemployment, getting stimulus checks, filing taxes, getting in touch with family and friends and also personal creative projects," says Anna Winters, who does outreach as a Tech Specialist for the CTC. "In the process of working directly with people and technology, the door opens for genuine conversation and engagement."

The lack of access to technology for those disadvantaged is nothing new, and COVID has created more challenges as we push to pursue our vision, creating a strong community where everyone thrives. Together, as we continue to navigate the very dynamic and difficult times, the library will be #stillhere to support our community as we continue to bridge the divide and provide technology access to all.

Collaborating During COVID: Denver Public Library and Denver Public Schools Team Up To Support Students During the Pandemic

When the library closed its doors in March 2020, we immediately missed connecting with our customers. While millions walk through our doors to use our services during normal times, our teams also hit the road in our Bookmobiles, visiting schools, community-based sites, older adult facilities and so many other sites to provide books, services and great information about the library. Like our locations, we had to put the brakes on our Bookmobiles at the onset of the pandemic.

When we heard that Denver Public Schools (DPS) students were in need of additional resources to support their virtual learning, our teams jumped into action. In addition to being able to access the great virtual programs and services the library already had available, both DPS and the library quickly started pushing out information about the ways the library was able to support students and educators.

Thanks to a collaboration with DPS, all DPS students were able to access the library's entire ebook and audiobook collection using their student ID numbers. DPS students were able to flex their creative muscles and participate in our Maker Challenge and our reimagined Summer of Adventure program virtually. Educators were able to welcome guests to their virtual classrooms to learn about the library or to provide a read aloud for their classrooms.

In April, once it was deemed safe to do so, our Bookmobiles were able to hit the road once again to begin to connect with DPS students and families. Thanks to the Denver Public Library Friends Foundation, the DPS Foundation and DPS Library Services, our teams were able to provide free take-home books at DPS meal distribution sites across the city.

This partnership continued throughout 2020, and we were able to distribute over 40,000 free books to the community and got to see a lot of excited students take home their new favorite read ... to keep. Though 2020 was a year full of challenges, through our collaboration with DPS we were able to help students succeed.

From the Denver Public Library Friends Foundation

Dear Friends,

To echo the now-familiar phrase, 2020 was unprecedented. Yet the unforeseen challenges of the year also presented opportunities to problem-solve as we learned to connect with each other in new ways. Through it all, Denver Public Library was #stillhere.

As you scroll through the pages of this annual report, you read compelling stories demonstrating the resiliency of Denver Public Library and its customers. Reflecting on this time, we are especially grateful for everyone who supported us in any capacity. Your time, talent and generosity is the foundation of this Foundation! From building support for Central Library's first major renovation in 25 years to finding innovative ways to remotely support the library, we celebrate the following:

- Providing $1.5 million in distributions to the library. This included $326,000 for Children's Programming, $313,000 for Western History, as well as $375,000 for the Central Library renovations.
- Raising over $5.9 million during a global pandemic. This includes a record-setting virtual Booklovers Ball and Colorado Gives Day as well as over $4.2 million for the next generation of Central Library.

- Supporting programming that serves children and educators, Western History followers, immigrants and refugees, people experiencing life challenges like homelessness, computer and internet users as well as those enjoying curbside pickup and mobile services.

As the library moves forward while navigating budget cuts, its services and programs are in very high demand. The need for your support has never been greater. A gift to the Library Fund supports a flexible pool of funds for the highest-need programs, services and initiatives of the foundation and library.

It's wonderful to know that our work is helping the community persevere and rebuild. Special thanks go to our board of directors for their leadership and commitment during this year. We are excited to carry on the tremendous legacy of the Friends Foundation and invite you to continue with us in our work to help our tremendous library build a community where everyone thrives.

Yours very truly,

Deb Demuth
